Birth of the Brennan Healing Science Practitioners Association

By Karen Reid, BBSH Class of 2007 & President, BHS Practitioners Association NZ, Inc. www.thehealingcompany.co.nz

I am a full-time Brennan Healing Science Practitioner in my own business in New Zealand, The Healing Company, and I LOVE it! I do not practice any other modality, and to be honest, if one more person asks me if it is like Reiki, I think I'm gonna burst! So I thought to myself, Right, that's it! I'm sick of this ER. It's time for Brennan Healing Science to come into the light and be recognized as the wonderful, gorgeous, fantastic modality that it is.

It all started whilst watching an episode of Star Trek: Voyager. Captain Janeway (Star Trek's first female captain) is in control of a massive star ship that becomes stuck deep in the Delta quadrant. The crew is faced with fierce new enemies like the Borg, a cybernetic species who "assimilate" everyone in their path and have a stronghold on the Star Trek Galaxy. Janeway is an inspiring leader who manages to use her finely tuned instincts to lead the crew to safety and forms an alliance with the Borg. From a conscious perspective, the veil between reality and television in this instance, I believe, is very thin. We can learn a lot from Star Trek: Voyager.

So if we can just forgive the rather aggressive ways of Borg assimilation and their somewhat rigid quest for perfection for a moment, we can sense that they are actually an extremely clever species who are very well organized in an interconnected collective consciousness. Decisions for the species are made in unison through the "hive" mind. Interestingly, they can travel anywhere in a matter of moments throughout the galaxy via "transwarp hubs," which are located in each of the four quadrants.

So where am I going with this? Well, I had one of those epiphany moments whilst watching. That's what we need, yes—we, the Brennan Healing Science species, could connect internationally like the Borg do, through "hubs." The idea rumbled on from there. Yes, we could have associations in each country, which could act as hubs that connect us all together as practitioners and make us strong. We could use these hubs as professional associations that discuss problems, solutions, referrals, and techniques, just like doctor's associations. I once worked as a research assistant for orthopedic surgeons, and I remember they were always flying off to meet each other at conferences. They would come back refreshed, often with new ideas and techniques. I learnt that this is how medicine progresses: physicians borrow ideas from each other, make changes where needed, research methods to prove what works, and there you go. That's how healthcare is advanced.

Oh yes, I thought, I might be onto something here, and I hope the school agrees too! I spent the next seven months researching how to start an association and what I would have to do to get Brennan Healing Science recognized in New Zealand as a professional stand-alone modality. I also enrolled in a business course so that I could understand the business side of things better. At the end of this course I was armed with a strategic business plan, a grant application for $5,000 to take to the New Zealand government, and a whole new passion on how to market Brennan Healing Science on a shoestring budget.

Understanding the need to ask permission to use trademarked material, I wrote to BBSH and asked if I could use the name Brennan Healing Science Practitioners Association NZ, Inc., and they replied that I could. Now that I had name approval, the next step was to register the BHS association under the New Zealand Companies Office. To start an association you need 16 people to sign a document supporting it. With only three practitioners in New Zealand, this was going to be tricky. I pitched the BHS association around to family and friends to sign it. Time was tight: I had three days to get this done, and I even agreed to move a piano and participate in a pub quiz in exchange for four signatures!

So everything seemed to be coming to critical mass. The government agreed to give me the $5,000 to start Brennan Healing Science as an official modality in New Zealand, as well as to set up my own business, The Healing Company, specializing in Brennan Healing Science.

BHS Practitioners Thomas Meibusch, Martyn Cook, and I had our first official meeting via Skype. We talked about the objectives of the association, our passion, our pleasure, and the finer details of our vision as an association.

We applied to the New Zealand Charter of Health Practitioners, Inc. for acceptance of Brennan Healing Science as a complementary health modality, standing alongside other modalities such as Reiki, Chiropractic, and Acupuncture. We then presented BHS to the Health Charter local board and later to a regional board. They were fascinated with our modality, they absolutely loved the school brochures, and all in all they were very pleased to have us on board!

Brennan Healing Science was thus accepted into the Charter. Any Brennan Healing Science Practitioner from New Zealand can become a member of both our association and the New Zealand Health Charter, where they will be part of the complementary health movement and protected under an insurance policy designed specifically for complementary health practitioners.

Barbara has expressed her hopes that other countries would follow, so I posted the news of our New Zealand association on Healer's Connect. From there several people have shown an interest, and we have the beginnings of associations being born in Canada, America, and the United Kingdom.

Together I believe we can form professional associations all over the world to connect as practitioners and really shine the light on Brennan Healing Science.

Healing Center for Women

by Sukhmeet Singh, BBSH Class of 2009

My introduction to healing and to this hugely transformational journey that is BBSH has been so freeing and empowering that I want to share that gift with other women—particularly Asian and Middle Eastern. And what better way than to open a Healing Center for women through which others can break free, like me, and be all of who they are—just like I have been allowed to be all of who I am!

I have led a very sheltered and protected life. Traveling on my own halfway around the world to attend healing school was a manifestation of my deepest longing—to have freedom and space to be who I am! This is something that has been consistently denied me as a result of being an Asian woman. Of course, living in an Islamic country for over 20 years has reinforced that limitation.

The focus of my Year 4 Project is to open up a safe container through the creation of a Healing Center for Women (which is still a work in progress). The Center is for those who have lived a life of limitation and helplessness to become free and independent, as I believe the woman is the backbone of the family. I would like to integrate the training and skills I have acquired over the years in different healing modalities. Specifically, I would like to integrate the Brennan Healing Science and Psych-Spiritual Development skills, along with my innate ability to feel compassion and empathy for women, to help them get in touch with their essence and to live an empowered life.

My wound is that as an Indian woman I am not good enough. A woman in India is perceived as a liability to her parents from the day she is born. She is given a lower status than that of her male sibling and is suppressed from childhood. She is raised with threats lest she do “wrong” things. Then she is given away to a man in marriage and automatically assumes multiple roles: self-sacrificing housewife, cook, maid, mother, daughter-in-law, sister-in-law. She performs the roles with perfection, patience, and with little thought for herself. A martyr!

I grew up feeling trapped in a woman’s body and having to conform to the system’s distorted beliefs based on fear and limitations. Most women from India and the Middle East find that their own needs never count. Many choose to sulk within and blame, getting ill and tired in the process. I would like to create a new awareness among these women, just as I learned that it can be done in a different way. I would like to help them realize it is their own issue, that they are co-creators in this vicious cycle. They can make other choices that give them space to hold it all.

I had to come to BBSH to realize the depth of my wounding. I began to understand it can be done in another way. I can be loving and compassionate yet express my own self. I can be big, powerful, independent, and be free!!!

I have come a long way in unlocking my own potential and becoming whole. I hope to compassionately guide and help others on their own journey of self-discovery, which will allow for their own process of unfoldment. Clients who come to the healing center will have the gifts of my BBSH training at their disposal. I will be able to hold them in love with an open heart, as I’ve been doing for myself over the past four years, leading to greater self-awareness and self-love.

I believe the project in itself has started the process of change. And being able to present this is such a gift from the universe—a great message that I am enough and capable. I feel so much hope now for other women very much like me. To face my inner demons and risk being seen in all my vulnerability—in defense and in essence—has in itself been a great challenge. Now I try to hold it all and seek a balance between the older and younger generations, having one foot in each and believing that there is a middle ground. This is going to be the most important piece in my healing practice as well—trying to help women realize they can hold the middle ground, too. It doesn’t have to be either/or.

I want to express gratitude for being given this opportunity. It is deeply healing for me, particularly as an Indian woman. Despite the progress and modernization of several of these countries, there are still very ancient and debilitating beliefs that really undermine women. I feel that the wonder of working on this project is itself the endorsement of my own personal transformation, leading to the transformation of others who come in contact with me.

I feel such awe and reverence for the way this project has helped me bring this healing center so much closer to manifestation. This is a center where other women can share their personal journey, pain, sorrow, hopes, and dreams, leading to much growth and awareness, just as I have been allowed to do at BBSH. I feel convinced that if I—having been conditioned from childhood to mask my true feelings and block expressing my magnificence—can do it, so can all those women out there who long to blossom and whose souls crave to heal. There is hope. Thank you, BBSH.

How I Grew My Thriving Practice

by Melanie Roche, Former BBSH Faculty

When I was a student, I would listen to the teachers talk about how they had busy practices. I would vacillate between feeling incredulous—How does she see so many people?—to wanting a practice but not believing it would be possible for me.

I had many images to overcome about doing what I love and earning an abundant income.

To my delight, today I have the thriving private practice of my dreams. I work with people all over the world, by phone, by Skype, and in person. I discovered my practice is a mirror of my inner state. That means that the rest of my life—my awareness and tracking of how my field is doing, my personal process, self-care, relationships, visceral experience of spiritual connection, creative expression—all influence how full my practice is and how I'm actually present and practicing with each client.

I am now happy to share with you five strategies I've used in growing my practice:

1. I did it gradually. Initially, I rented an office one night a week and kept my full-time job. Later, I worked part-time at a spa, then a wellness center while I also wrote medical articles for websites. This allowed me to see clients for more days. Affiliating yourself with a busy wellness center gets you known in the community and working with people whom you might not ordinarily meet.

2. I leveraged my network. When I wanted more clients, I emailed my existing clients and asked for referrals. I offered my existing clients a free session for each person they sent me who had an initial session. I know that if people have one session with me, they're more likely to become regular clients, so this was worth it to me financially. I also offered a money-back guarantee: if any client was dissatisfied with the session, I guaranteed he or she could get a refund. Since many of my clients are professionals, I wanted to encourage them to feel comfortable talking about the benefits of energy healing to their friends and colleagues. No one asked for a refund and my practice doubled within a month.

growth

3. I began to treat my practice like a healthcare professional business. I had already incorporated and kept my business and personal money in separate accounts (a crucial step). I hired a virtual assistant to set up initial appointments; schedule people three months in advance; send out, track, and send back to me completed client intake forms; enter clients' contact information into my computer; and record clients' credit card information. Then I hired a bookkeeper and someone to clean my office once a month. I learned it's a better use of my time to see more clients and give these jobs to others.

4. I always have a fifteen-minute conversation with potential clients at no charge. They tell me what's going on in their lives. I sense in energetically to see if energy healing is useful for what they're working with and if I want to work with them. I also encourage them to decide if they want to work with me. If it's a match, I tell them how I work, how a session works, and my cancellation policy. Unless the client is a student at BBSH, the first session is 90 minutes, so we can discuss the client intake questions and I can get a sense of the issues before we even get to the table work. Follow-up sessions and BIP sessions are 50 minutes.

5. I received healings regularly from a Brennan Healing Science Practitioner when I was a student. I worked with three healers over the course of my eight years of school. This was in addition to the practice sessions with fellow students for DLMs and in addition to personal process sessions. This allowed me to think about how I would do things when I graduated. I began to know what resonated best for me in everything from how the office was set up to how the healer talked with me during and after sessions. Of course, it also had the effect of clearing, charging, and balancing my field. I believe self-care is crucial to how well I can serve my clients. I find as I see more people, my need for excellent self-care has only increased.

Working with clients gives me great joy. It allows me to practice my own embodiment, my own energy, and my own gifts. I believe that as I am fully myself, I harmonically give people a cellular experience of being fully themselves. This resonance is what makes people come to us for healing. We each have our unique gifts and ways of being. People sense our qualities, choose us, and make use of us so they can become their full selves.

One of my passions is teaching people how to have an abundant private practice and the life that they want. I believe that this requires inner and outer transformation. Facilitating this work with Images, healing, and listening with my whole body and field is a process I love. If you feel like it would be useful for you to work on these issues, I invite you to contact me: Melanie@MelanieRoche.com.

Class of 2010 Scholarship Program Gift

By Theresa D-Litzenberger, Jill Arace, Amy Loubalu, Kathryn Curio, BBSH Class of 2010

The graduating class of 2010 has created a scholarship program in partnership with Our Weeping Angel Foundation to assist Year 4 students who are financially struggling with tuition. The gift idea began when we were finishing Year 3 and realized that some of our class might not be able to return due to financial difficulties. Many of those students did in fact return; however, the financial commitment remained a struggle for a lot of students as we pushed to the end of this journey together. This awareness was the seed for our class gift to the school.

After many emails flying between class members over the summer, we set up a scholarship committee during Class 1: Jill Arace, Amy Loubalu, Kathryn Curio and Theresa D-Litzenberger. Together, we brainstormed all the details and all the “what ifs”: what we needed to do to raise money, how and by whom money would be distributed, and what steps were needed to keep it going after we had graduated. Jill worked with Denise Mollo, BBSH Student Affairs Manager, who faithfully and tirelessly assisted us with understanding school policies and what we, as a group, needed to consider to make the scholarship successful for years to come. BBSH does not operate a scholarship program, but Denise let us know about Our Weeping Angel Foundation (OWAF), a non-profit organization that financially supports healers and clients. Kathy worked with Jack Dean, founder of OWAF, and acted as liaison between our class and the foundation. Amy and Theresa helped organize the communication between the committee and the class. We tested the system by raising funds through the end of the year and collected $5,700 that provided scholarships for eight of our classmates in financial need.

The following year we again turned to raising funds for our class gift, as well as developing a system that can operate smoothly on an annual basis. The scholarship plan now assists enrolled Year 4 students who are in financial need with a gift equal to one payment on the BBSH monthly payment plan (approximately $770). The number of students who receive scholarships is determined by the amount of money available. Payment is then made directly to BBSH; however, the student's identity remains confidential (other than to BBSH and OWAF office staff). If the number of applicants exceeds the amount of money available, a lottery system determines who receives the gift. On the other hand, if there is more money than there are applicants, the money then rolls over to the next year's scholarship. Anyone may donate, and donations are accepted at any time throughout the year. There is one disbursement of funds per year.

The Class of 2010 ended up donating over $8,000 to this fund. This is truly our gift, and our hope is that each succeeding Year 4 class will choose to shepherd the fundraising along.

In Seeds of the Spirit®, 1999, Heyoan says, The wholeness of the self, peace and serenity, integration of all the self, is a gift to yourself through the creative process. It is a gift to live who you are completely. In response, Amy writes: From this place of discovering the gift of ourselves, we as a class offer this gift to the school, in the hope that more people will continue on this deep journey to their own gift. The individual commitment to this work is profound. And as a group we have journeyed together in our unique way. We deeply honor both the individual commitment and the importance of the container created by each individual class. We honor the Seeds of the Spirit that have been planted within each of us and hope to contribute in some small way to many more souls walking this path, in their own timing!

tranquility

Peggy's Place—A Healers Retreat Center

by Cindy Mason, BBSH Class of 2009

Peggy's Place is a retreat center specifically for healers that was also the subject of my Year 4 Project. My intention is for healers to experience tranquility, rest, and renewal through contact with nature as a way of deepening contact with themselves—mind, body, and spirit. Peggy's Place offers support, caring, and respect for the wholeness of healers and the people they help. The center offers healers the space for rest, solitude, or reunion with other like-minded people.

I came to the vision of Peggy's Place while I was in my third year at the Barbara Brennan School of Healing, while participating in the Creative Arts meditation during Class 4 in April 2008. The days just before this class were filled with shock and trauma. My roommate and beautiful friend Peggy Delainey stumbled, fell, and broke her leg. She was transported to a local hospital for treatment. Almost immediately she was diagnosed with stage-four lung cancer that had spread to her bones. She was given a life expectancy of two months to a year. The shock and heartache during those days was overwhelming.

During the Creative Arts class I experienced a magnificent healing. As I entered into meditation, I experienced Christ present, sitting in front of me. With deep love and compassion, he looked into my eyes. He moved his cupped hands to my heart. He was holding his heart and put it into my heart.

Christ said, "You will create a community of the sacred human heart, the little chapels of love and light you have dreamed of for so long. You will create a global community of loving support for healers."

This healing experience was deep and profound. I surrendered into his healing presence.

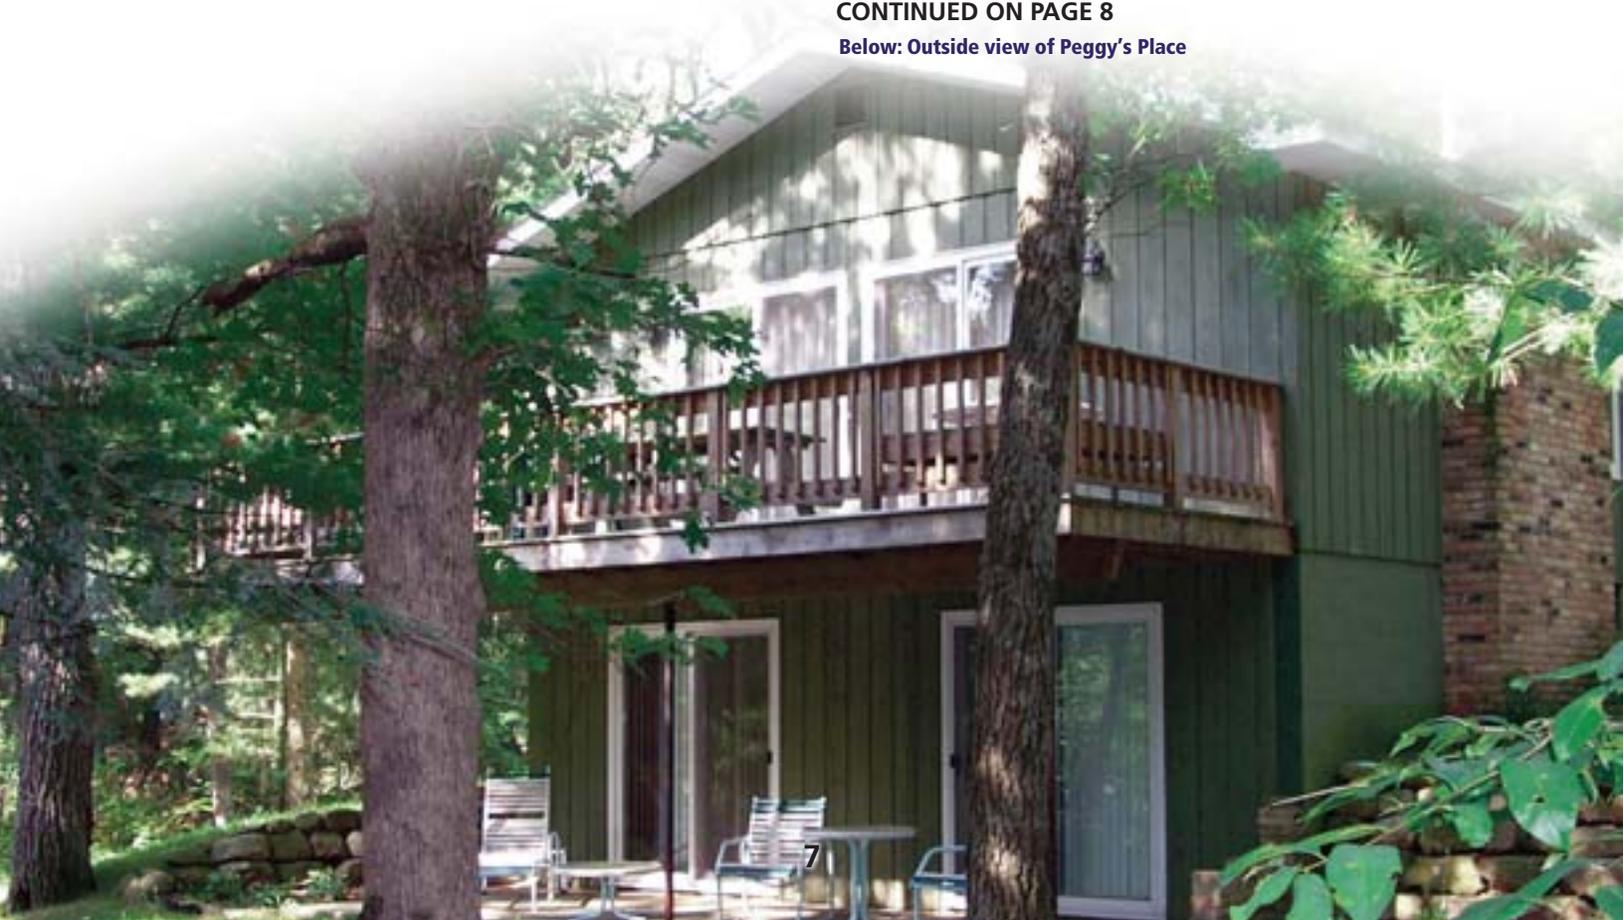

During the time between classes, it became clear that Peggy had become my healer. She was going to teach me how to walk through a life-threatening illness and perhaps the dying process. As we both worked through this, I discovered that the deeply held wounds Peggy feared were at the root of this dis-ease, and were deep within my life experience as well. I understood the necessity of continuing to find the courage to dive deeply into the darkest places within. I committed to deep personal process as a lifestyle.

The Class 5 Creative Arts experiential was stunning. Immediately a loving, authoritative voice began to speak, taking up exactly where we had been a full six weeks before. I heard, "And you will call the first center Peggy's Place." The process of discerning began, and I remembered Barbara's words: "If you receive guidance you must follow through, no matter what!"

When I asked for guidance about Peggy's Place, I had profound clarity. Peggy's Place would represent the personal side of our healership, a commitment to personal process, self-care, support from like-minded peers, and continued contact with classmates.

I visited Peggy to discuss my plans. After receiving her approval and support, I jumped into creating the healing center.

For its location, I found an intimate, quiet setting nestled in the beautiful arms of Mother Earth, with fresh air, a beautiful artesian spring lake, magnificent stars at night, and towering mighty oaks. It is a special place where you can take long walks, unhurried, absorbing the sacredness of all life.

My first priority was to ground and clear the property in a high-frequency energy. I called in guides to create the container for Peggy's Place. I sat for guidance from the beginning. It was important to me that this creation be built on a firm foundation of prayer, rooted in Divine Energy and assistance.

I used a team approach to support me as I moved into action. There is a team in place to maintain both the interior and exterior of the property. There is a team to greet and support guests during their stay. There is a team of professionals working on the design and marketing of the center.

One of the first things we did was design a logo for Peggy's Place that re-created a drawing of an angel that Peggy had created for her BBSH art project. The designer and I worked closely with Peggy, getting her input and approval. Currently we are working on a website that contains all of the information about the center: www.PeggysPlaceHealersRetreat.com.

The center is now ready and open to receive you! I have been enjoying the healing experience of what seems to be effortless unfolding of my healership. The actual coming together of this creation energizes and inspires me.

Peggy's Place is located in central Wisconsin, one hour north of Madison, on a beautiful lake surrounded by an acre of mature forest. The house is completely furnished and everything you need is waiting for you. Pack only your clothing, personal items, and food. This beautiful, comfortable setting invites you to enjoy the tranquility of nature without sacrificing the comforts of home. The intention for Peggy's Place is to be a not-for-profit service to healers. Every effort has been made to make the center as affordable as possible.

It is my prayer that Peggy's Place will be an environment of authenticity and sacredness, helping healers experience wholeness on all levels of their being and in their lives by allowing themselves to be supported and honored, walking side by side with other healers who are seeking healing for themselves as well.

Peggy has transitioned into Spirit, surrounded by the BBSH community and those she loved. We will miss her beautiful presence in physical form, but know we are forever connected through love.

It is with deep thankfulness I offer Peggy's Place to you.

In Loving Memory of Peggy May Delaine

May 8, 1958 - May 28, 2009

By Nancy Lishack (BBSH Class of 2009)

I am deeply honored to write a tribute to Peggy Delaine, as I feel her personal journey has touched many hearts. I feel very blessed and grateful to have walked this path with her. It still amazes me how our lives intertwined so beautifully, creating such a meaningful and loving relationship, especially during the last few years of her life. At times, it is difficult for me to imagine my life without her. She changed my life in such profound ways.

It was during a moment of grief and questioning that I recalled the words of Joseph Campbell: "Participate joyfully in the sorrows of the world. We cannot cure the world of sorrows but we can choose to live in joy." Living in joy is something Peggy did very well, and perhaps her greatest gift to me was modeling the joy of living.

On a beautiful day in Florida, Peggy and I ventured on a slow walk along the beach. I sensed that we were fully present to ourselves, to each other, and to the natural world. Silently, we walked side by side, taking in the salty air, the impeccable blue skies, and the brightness of the sun that enveloped our being.

At one point, Peggy paused for a moment, drank in her surroundings, breathed in all that was there and whispered, "This is one of the best days of my life. I am happy." No words needed to be exchanged further as I felt the oneness, the unity, and the grace between us.

As we continued to bask in the glory of the day, Peggy spotted a tiny creature at the water's edge. A seahorse lay dormant on the sand. Knowing not to touch it with human hands, Peggy immediately found a piece of wood that she used to gently pick up and tenderly toss the seahorse back into the ocean. At first, we didn't think we rescued the seahorse after all. As we watched the seahorse drift back and forth among the soothing waves, we patiently stood by praying and hoping the seahorse would spring back to life. Brilliantly, the sun's magnificent rays appeared and powerfully pierced the water as though it were a spotlight shining upon this strange looking creature. As the waters brightened, we witnessed the seahorse moving from a "horizontal" to a "vertical" position, breathing in life as it bobbed its head back and forth, back and forth. We were both in awe of what just happened, embraced each other, and jumped for joy. It was one of the most beautiful moments I have shared with another—a truly divine moment!

During her vulnerable, painful, and courageous battle with cancer, Peggy referenced this joyful moment many times. In the spirit of hope and prayer, Peggy quietly said to me, "I want to be that seahorse. I want to go from horizontal to vertical. I want to swim again, too!"

Let us all be vertical, let us all swim again in Peggy's memory and with Peggy's strength and grace.

experience

We hope you have enjoyed our Spring issue of "BBSH In Touch" in our new online format. We invite you to share your ideas, stories, and accomplishments with us for future issues. Perhaps you have had the experience of using BBSH healing skills to help you realize a beautiful lesson, one that moved you through this otherwise uncomfortable place. Or perhaps you would like to tell us about the community projects you are involved in, what you find you specialize in, as well as other topics that your fellow students and graduates might find interesting.

Please make sure your article is 1,000 words or less. We would also enjoy any high-resolution picture related to your article. You may send your articles and pictures to cande@barbarabrennan.com. I look forward to hearing from you.

Warmly,
Cande
